The EDGE Distributors Group To Carry Digital Lifestyle Outfitters' HomeDock Pro iPod Interface

Provides Easy Integration of the iPod Into Any Home Entertainment System

Seattle, WA - April 16, 2007 - The EDGE Distributors Group -- a rapidly growing service-oriented group of 14 independently owned regional distributors catering primarily to custom install and residential systems integrators -- today announced a new relationship with Digital Lifestyle Outfitters (DLO). As part of this association, The EDGE Group will be offering DLO's HomeDock PRO to its nationwide network of over 9,000 custom integrators and specialty retailers.

The HomeDock PRO is an iPod interface that employs on-TV navigation with an easy-to-use graphical interface. According to DLO Director of Business Development Mike Woods, HomeDock PRO's features, along with its RS-232 connectivity, make easy the integration of the iPod into any custom home entertainment system, benefiting both the custom integrator and the homeowner. HomeDock PRO carries an MSRP of $300.

Of the relationship with EDGE, Woods says, "The custom installation market is an important and burgeoning market for DLO and the HomeDock PRO was created specifically for integrators. With EDGE's vast dealer network, it is a natural fit for us."

Mike Hench, President of The EDGE Group says, "The iPod is rapidly becoming THE personal music content source within the home and DLO's HomeDock Pro is the perfect piece for our integrators. Its best-in-class connectivity, controllability and functionality give them the most capable and easy-to-use solution for their clients.

The EDGE Group differs from other distribution groups in that it offers products that are of both a basic need and a unique niche for its dealers, typically employing a complementary line philosophy. The EDGE Group strategically selects the lines it carries, enabling the group to offer a full-suite of solutions to partners and dealers alike.
